It's Flying Saucer season again, and this year they are being sighted in carload lots in some parts of New Mexico. This photo was taken by a Flying Saucer fan. He said he shot it last June in the same area that is "in" for Saucers this year. He said it was 70 feet in diameter, and, as you can see, it is shaped like an automobile hubcap. The photo was among several released yesterday by Gabriel Green, president of the Amalgamated Flying Saucer Clubs of America, which has its headquarters in Los Angeles, where the magnetic vibrations are different.
